New York City's Culture of Climate

Climate action in New York is a challenge because of the city's size and population. But like anything else in the city, raw ambition, innovation, and bringing ideas to life in art – is how things are moving. Today's Issue No. 22 of the Pyramid is dedicated to the people making the concrete jungle cleaner, and greener.

City Releases Urban Forest Plan: 1 Million Trees by 2040

On Tuedsay, Chief Climate Officer Louise Yeung (right) announced the city's first-ever Urban Forest Plan. New Yorkers want more trees! The goal is to increase the NYC's tree canopy (shade) to 30 percent.

Food for Thought: Crowdrise for NYC's Urban & Green

Picture the grimiest station you can think of - Canal Street J/Z. Or the dirty, treeless stretch of your commute - 14th between 1st and 3rd. What if New Yorkers could stake support for revitalization — powerwashing, painting, retiling, mulching, muralism - right where it's wanted, in an app like StreetEasy. If speed and permits were ingrained, what kind of impact could cleaning and greening have, now?
